ARIZONA MINES.

Engineer Farish Talks of Some of the Large Properties.

Interview in the Denver Republican. William A. Farish, the mining engineer, who has just returned from an inspection of the prominent mines in Arizona, was met yesterday by a reporter, to whom he imparted some information regarding the outlook in that Territory. He is interested in the Union mine, seven miles from Phoenix, which he examined while there. The main shaft is now 400 feet down. There are five or six parallel veins of about five feet wide, and two of them are being worked at present with good results.

"Mining all over the Territory is very encouraging just now," he said, "and a great deal of Denver capital is being invested in that region. The Phoenix mine, situated thirty-five miles north of the town of that name, is working its full force. It has a thirty-stamp mill, and is turning out from seventy-five to eighty tons a day, and the reports of the ore are said to be very flattering.

"About sixty-five miles from Phoenix is the Castle Creek mine, owned by a Denver syndicate, and of which I. N. Large is superintendent. It turns out free gold ore running to almost $20 a ton and keeps ten stamps going. They are working to their full capacity with plenty of ore in sight.

"Along the Bradshaw range of mountains are some first-class mines lying between Phoenix and Prescott. They are gold and silver producers and it is only of late that they have begun to really develop them. Several of the mines are owned by Denver people. The Peck district has some good high-grade silver mines, but little is heard of them here as the ore is shipped to El Paso. The Tip Top mine, also a high-grade ore producer, sends its shipments to El Paso.

"To the north of Phoenix some 100 miles is the Crown King mine. It has a wide vein that runs about $50 to the ton. The managers say they have $1,500,000 worth of ore in sight, and certainly they are sparing no expense in working and taking as much ore out as they can with the present facilities. Not far distant is the Congress mine of 'Diamond' Joe Reynolds. Workmen are busy developing it just now. It has reached 700 feet and they are in addition turning out fifty tons a day. A twenty stamp mill is running, but they are preparing to double the capacity.

"The only drawbacks the mine owners experience," Mr. Farish said, "during the past few months were a scarcity of experienced miners and a lack of railroad facilities. The Maricopa & Phoenix Railroad was, however, about to extend their line to the Bradshaw mining district."
